It may indeed be phantasy when I
Essay to draw from all created things
Deep, heartfelt, inward joy that closely clings;
And trace in leaves and flowers that round me lie
Lessons of love and earnest piety.
So let it be; and if the wide world rings
In mock of this belief, it brings
Nor fear, nor grief, nor vain perplexity.
So will I build my altar in the fields,
And the blue sky my fretted dome shall be,
And the sweet fragrance that the wild flower yields
Shall be the incense I will yield to Thee,
The only God! and thou shalt not despise
Even me, the priest of this poor sacrifice.

Samuel Taylor Coleridge

The "control of nature" is a phrase conceived in arrogance, born of the Neanderthal age of biology and philosophy, when it was supposed that nature exists for the convenience of man.

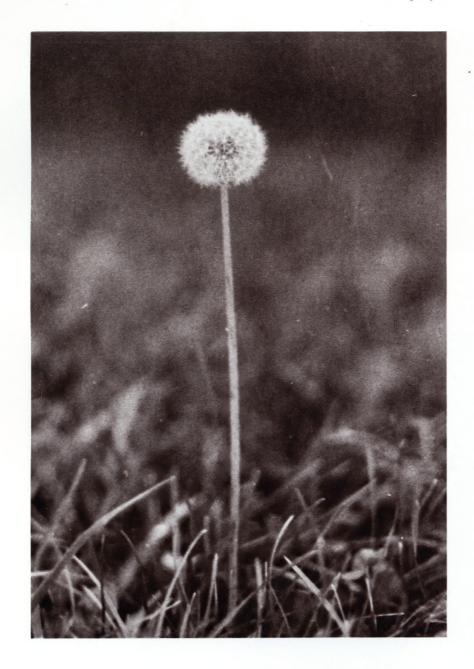

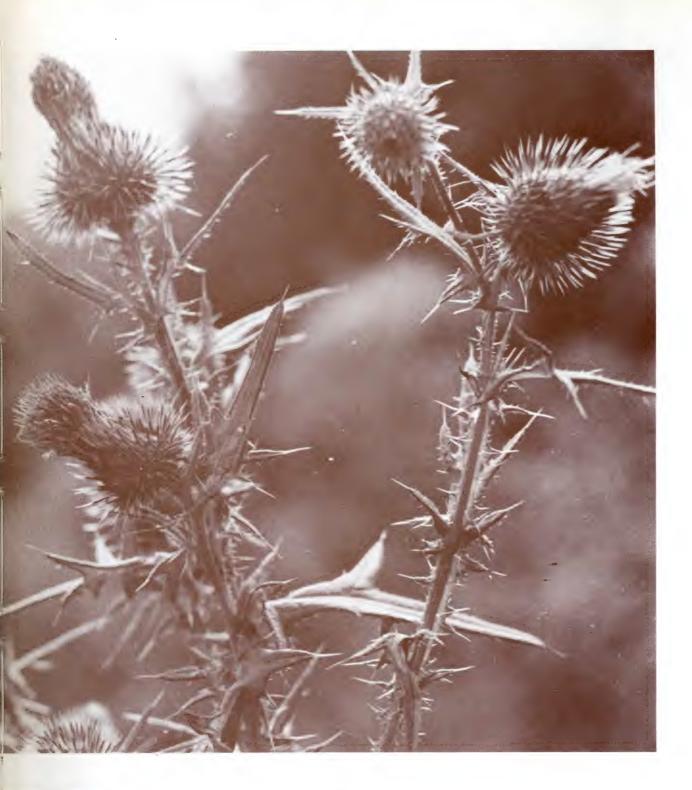

... May My Ancestors—In All the World—Still Have the Wisdom, To Live with Nature To Come and Pray, To ALL, Our Spirits There

Sioux prayer

What has gone wrong, probably, is that we have failed to see ourselves as part of a large and indivisible whole . . . We have failed to understand, or denied, that the earth does not belong to us, but we to the earth.

Two hundred years ago on July 4, 1776, fifty six English citizens, acting in the name of a new nation, boldly laid their fortunes, reputations and lives in jeopardy by treasonously signing a uniquely revolutionary document, the Declaration of Independence. In this statement they declared that all men were created equally; that no man had a divine right to rule another and that when usurpations of individual sovereignty were continually perpetrated against a people, that people had the right, indeed, the duty to throw off the source of that usurpation. This they did with no authority save that of the urgings of an active, militant minority and the enlightenment of a popular ideology.

Of the two million people in the American colonies at the time, probably only a third wholly supported this audacious and illegal action of the Continental Congress. Another third opposed it wholeheartedly, many of whom eventually died to contain the revolution's advance. The remainder stood as a bewildered mass, uncertain of their loyalties.

Today, as we look back in celebration, it must be remembered that at no time did this revolution have the firm backing of a majority of the new nation in whose name it was fomented. Nor must it be forgotten that the battle for independence continued for seven long and trying years or that many brave men and women on both sides sacrificed their lives for what they believed in. It was neither an easy separation nor was it a happy one—for few things born of violence are.

Militarily, the insurgent forces faced incredible obstacles. Mass desertions from the army were commonplace and those who remained were a hagard and undisciplined bunch. They were a very difficult army to lead and as a result few strategic victories were ever achieved. Final victory came only when monarchial France entered the struggle supplying Washington's rebel army with munitions, troops and professional leadership. France did this, not so much out of admiration of the American cause, but because she wished to strip England of her American colonies just as Great Britain had done to France only two decades earlier. Regardless of how, a victory was finally achieved.

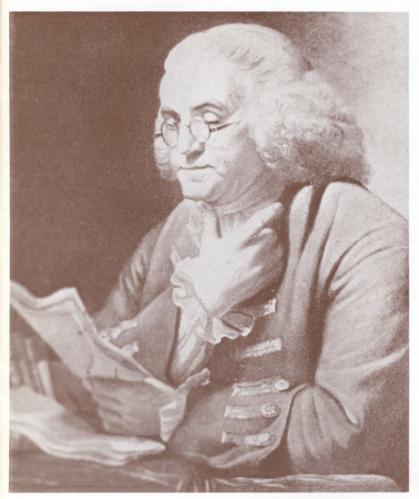

This, however, did not signal peace nor liberty for all as the revolutionary document had proposed. Hundreds of British loyals had been forced from their land and homes never to return. Many were murdered or chased from the country. Several hundred thousand black men and women remained in bondage while their masters, the victors, selfishly celebrated their own liberty. American Indians were to continue fighting for the British well into the nineteenth century. Women in America, as the rest of the world, could neither vote nor hold office.

The revolution had made many promises which only time and maturity could bring to realization. But the statements of the revolution were to live on and remind future Americans of the promises of their birthright. The revolution was not over. Herein is the victory of the revolution, not that it delivered so much, but that it promised so much. The words, the ideals, the goals are all there. In some cases it may take centuries to live up to those ideals, but today as always in the republic's history there is a vital need to reassess where we have been and where we are going. The revolution must be our moral mooring in the sea of decision-making. Much of our history has been that of turning our backs on our birthright and oppressing one group for the advancement of another. The ideas of 1776 must be our conscience and we must feel guilt when we deny that birthright.

Any celebration of this revolution must pay full attention to the ideals behind it, many of which we as a nation have not yet lived up to. The celebration must engender a greater understanding of where we have been so as to light our way to where we must go.
